

L. FRANK BAUM

*The Wonderful
Wizard of Oz*

"I snapp,
probably I
"I'll end
"I always and frail."

They ac fever and in the mi that, when powerful is not care forever. B
the bright eyes grew
But th

"We mu
he said, a until Don and she f
"What
"If we l flowers i the dog i
It was the Scare not treat
"Run f flower be if you sh
So th could go
"Let o

THE WONDERFUL WIZARD OF OZ

Scarecrow. So they picked up Tina and put the dog in Dorothy's lap, and then they made a chair with little benches for the wind and their arms for the arms and carried the sleeping girl between them through the flowers.

On and on they walked, and it seemed that the process of finding flowers that surrounded them would never end. They followed the foot slugs among the poppies. The flowers had been too strong for the huge heart and he had given up at last, and fallen only a short distance from the end of the poppy bed, where the mossy grass grew in beautiful green fields before them.

"We can do nothing for him," said the Tin Woodman, sadly. "He is much too heavy to lift. We must leave him here to sleep in peace, and perhaps he will dream that he has found courage at last."

"I'm sorry," said the Scarecrow. "The Lion was a very good counsellor for one so cowardly. But let us go on."

They carried the sleeping girl to a pretty spot beside the river, far enough from the poppy field to prevent her breathing any more of the poison of the flowers, and here they laid her gently on the soft grass and waited for the fresh breeze to wake her.

The Queen of the Field Mice

"We CANNOT be far from the road of yellow brick, now," remarked the Scarecrow, as he stood beside the girl. "for we have come nearly as far as the river carried us away."

The Tin Woodman was about to reply when he heard a low growl, and turning his head (which worked beautifully on hinges) he saw a strange beast come bounding over the grass toward them. It was, indeed, a great yellow Wildcat, and the Woodman thought it must be chasing something, for its ears were lying close to its head and its mouth was wide open, showing two rows of ugly teeth, while its red eyes glowed like balls of fire. As it came nearer the Tin Woodman saw that running before the beast was a little gray field mouse, and although he had no heart he knew it was wrong for the Wildcat to try to kill such a pretty, harmless creature.

So the Woodman raised his axe, and as the Wildcat ran by he gave it a quick blow that cut the beast's head clean off from the body, and it rolled over at his feet in two pieces.

The field mouse, now that it was freed from its enemy, stopped

L. FRANK BAUM

The Wonderful Wizard of Oz

L. FRANK BAUM

The Wonderful Wizard of Oz

THE WONDERFUL WIZARD OF OZ

When Dorothy is swept away by a cyclone from her gray Kansas home, she finds herself in the vibrant and fantastical land of Oz. Guided by the yellow brick road, she encounters host of unforgettable characters, each with their own unique desires and challenges. The Scarecrow longs for a brain, the Tin Man for a heart, and the Cowardly Lion for courage. Together, they embark on an odyssey to the Emerald City, where the mysterious Wizard of Oz is said to grant their deepest wishes.

The Discovery of Oz the Terrible

THE FOUR TRAVELERS walked up to the great gate of Emerald City and rang the bell. After ringing several times, it was opened by the same Guardian of the Gates they had met before.

"What! are you back again?" he asked, in surprise.

"Do you not see us?" answered the Scarecrow.

"But I thought you had gone to visit the Wicked Witch of the West."

"We did visit her," said the Scarecrow.

"And she let you go again?" asked the man, in wonder.

"She could not help it, for she is melted," explained the Scarecrow.

"Melted! Well, that is good news, indeed," said the man. "Who melted her?"

"It was Dorothy," said the Lion gravely.

"Good gracious!" exclaimed the man, and he bowed very low indeed before her.

Then he led them into his little room and locked the spectacles from the great box on all their eyes, just as he had done before. Afterward they passed on through the gate into the Emerald City. When the people heard from the Guardian of the Gates that Dorothy had melted the Wicked Witch of the West, they all gathered around the travelers and followed them in a great crowd to the Palace of Oz.

L. FRANK BAUM

The soldier with the green whiskers was still on guard before the door, but he let them in at once, and they were again met by the beautiful green girl, who showed each of them to their old rooms at once, so they might rest until the Great Oz was ready to receive them.

The soldier had the news carried straight to Oz that Dorothy and the other travelers had come back again, after destroying the Wicked Witch; but Oz made no reply. They thought the Great Wizard would send for them at once, but he did not. They had no word from him the next day, nor the next, nor the next. The waiting was tiresome and wearing, and at last they grew vexed that Oz should treat them in so poor a fashion, after sending them to undergo hardships and slavery. So the Scarecrow at last asked the green girl to take another message to Oz, saying if he did not let them in to see him at once they would call the Winged Monkeys to help them, and find out whether he kept his promises or not. When the Wizard was given this message he was so frightened that he sent word for them to come to the Throne Room at four minutes after nine o'clock the next morning. He had once met the Winged Monkeys in the Land of the West, and he did not wish to meet them again.

The four travelers passed a sleepless night, each thinking of the gift Oz had promised to bestow on him. Dorothy fell asleep only once, and then she dreamed she was in Kansas, where Aunt Em was telling her how glad she was to have her little girl at home again.

Promptly at nine o'clock the next morning the green-whiskered soldier came to them, and four minutes later they all went into the Throne Room of the Great Oz.

Of course each one of them expected to see the Wizard in the shape he had taken before, and all were greatly surprised when they looked about and saw no one at all in the room. They kept close to the door

L. FRANK BAUM

The Wonderful Wizard of Oz

Copyright © 2011
All rights reserved.
No part of this publication
may be reproduced, stored in a retrieval system, or transmitted in any form or by any means electronic, mechanical, photocopying, recording, or by any information
storage and retrieval system,
without permission in writing
from the publisher.

The Wonderful Wizard of Oz

The Cyclone

Dorothy lived in the midst of the great Kansas prairie, with Uncle Henry, who was a farmer, and Aunt Em, who was the farmer's wife. Their house was small, for the lumber to build it had to be carried by wagon many miles. There were four walls, a floor and a roof, which made one room, and this room contained a rusty looking cookstove, a cupboard for the dishes, a table, three or four chairs, and the beds. Uncle Henry and Aunt Em had a big bed in one corner, and Dorothy a little bed in another corner. There was no garret at all, and no cellar—except a small hole dug in the ground, called a cyclone cellar, where the family could go in case one of those great whirlwinds arose, mighty enough to crush any building in its path. It was reached by a trap door in the middle of the floor, from which a ladder led down into the small, dark hole.

When Dorothy stood in the doorway and looked around, she could see nothing but the great gray prairie on every side. Not a tree nor a house broke the broad sweep of flat country that reached to the edge of the sky in all directions. The sun had baked the plowed land into

